Interstices

One of the strangest aspects of isolation that comes with quarantine is we become alert to time and its passage. Time is not a line but a dimension in which we float seeking a way out or a different dimension. Artworks are of varying sizes, form, and complexities that interact with the infinite through the interstice of space, begin to exchange dialogue with each other. 'Interstices' bring together five contemporary artists from Bengal.

The exhibition presents artworks with contemporaneous physical and retinal paths, creating abstract niche systems of colors, dimensions, and layers. Holding within them are the rhythms of an individual's remembrance of daily life. When presented together, the artworks generate new energies and re-establish their identity.

MALAY SAHA

Malay Saha's paintings, breathe a fresh lease of life to inanimate objects that have always only been silent condiments to what may be called an urbane existential drama of mankind. He draws them into spotlight by giving them importance and individuality. Chairs, sofas, beds and such, thus come alive to narrate tales unheard of. His intriguing works are thought provoking. The presence of these works expands man's awareness of his very own world.

NABA KUMAR CHAKRABARTY

Visual, aural and linguistic icons on our computers and mobile phones now represent human gestures and feelings turning into keys to our engagement with life. These rapid changes constitute the visual language of the Naba Kumar's paintings. He says "My images derive their ingredients from the myriad signs of technology that dominate our world, the urban spaces in particular. I see shapes and gestures in cell phone towers, wires, television antennae, satellite dishes, and the cyberspace waiting to morph into meaningful pictorial forms."

SANTANU ROY

Santanu Roy's paintings demand certain stillness on part of the viewer. His lyrical works are like sudden bursts of lucid energy which mysteriously tug at something dream-like in the viewer. His works can help us come to the point of fathoming the dichotomy in our notions of place and space. It is the inner 'darkroom' of the perceiving soul which purges nature of the unnecessary burden of remembered details and transmutes them into highly compressed force-fields of impressions in these works.

SUDIP RAKSHIT

Most of Sudip's paintings are mixed-media works (acrylic, dust colour, crayon, water colour etc.) both on paper & canvas. The main theme of his paintings represents the contemporary man and his environment. The inevitable impact of the changing faces of time and society has found expressions in his recent works. He says "Like any other sensitive person I cannot turn my face away from what is happening around me. As a natural consequence my canvasses are being filled with subjects picked up from the life of an urban and rural citizen."

TAPAS BERA

Tapas tries to create fluid folds by making and draping thin slabs of clay. He says "My works in Ceramic are colorful inspirations of my surroundings. Thin layers of clay cast playful shadows, creating miniature worlds. I create my work by imagining the source of harmony and balance of the trees and plants as they change through the seasons."
